

HELIK Fingerprinting Examination

A fingerprint is an impression of the friction ridges found on the inner surface of a finger or a thumb. The science of fingerprinting is considered as an infallible means to identify a human being.

- It is a widely accepted fact that these patterns and details are unique & never repeated
- These ridges develop on the foetus in their definitive form before birth
- Ridges remain throughout the lifespan of an individual except for permanent scarring
- These patterns vary within limits which allow for classification

Fingerprinting has been one of civilisation's greatest developments, and its accuracy in attesting an individual's identification cannot be disputed.
